The Wages of Boys.

If "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," all work and poor pay is quite as likely to make him a discontented one. The labor of boys is, as a general rule, shamefully underpaid. The salary of a lad in a retail dry good store is from fifty to one hundred dollars per annum, and for this pittance he devotes from twelve to fourteen hours out of twenty-four, during six days of the week, to his employer's service. In other retail stores the allotment of work and the scale of remuneration are about the same as in Little Children's Dresses-Naked Arms the dry goods establishments.
